12. Educational aims of the programme

The course takes students through the processes, debates and practical skills involved in writing for the screen. It comprises film and television, fact and fiction, comedy and drama and is offered as a joint honours pathway alongside a range of complimentary subjects. The course aims to ensure that that all students will:

- develop a critical understanding of narrative processes, generic forms and modes of representation at work in film and television;
- acquire an understanding of the form through effective practical application;
- develop independent judgment, self-reliance and ability to work co-operatively with others;
- achieve the intellectual maturity to devise, research, develop, present and write an extended piece of independent work;
- develop the ability to assimilate, and judiciously use, the insights of scholarship and criticism in appreciating screenwriting;
- acquire and develop a range of subject-specific and transferable skills and qualities which will support students in academic study, graduate employment and/or postgraduate study;
- engage with independent and collective practice with the aim of developing a positive work ethic;
- develop creative and performance related skills consummate with those evident in professional practice.

13. Intended learning outcomes and learning, teaching and assessment methods

Knowledge and understanding:

On successful completion of the course, students will be able to:

- create a range of scripts and other textual or documentary outputs;
- produce work which is informed by and contextualised within, relevant theoretical issues and debates;
- experiment with and develop, as appropriate, forms, conventions, languages, techniques and practices;
- describe, theorise, interpret and evaluate film and television texts from a range of critical perspectives;
- manage time and resources effectively, by drawing on planning and organisational skills;
- draw upon and bring together ideas from different sources of knowledge and different academic disciplines;

Examples of learning, teaching and assessment methods used:

There are a variety of session types employed in Screenwriting that include seminars, lectures and workshops. The nature of the sessions depends on the content of the module. Assessment methods also offer a variety across the modules, from script treatment and full scale scripts to essays and reflective commentary. Where possible a variety of assessment types have been employed.

Cognitive and intellectual skills:

On successful completion of the course, students will be able to:

- present written and oral accounts in a clear, lucid and coherent fashion;
- exchange views with others in a constructive and open-minded context so as to work co-operatively with students from diverse backgrounds;
- express their own opinions and defend their own critical judgments;
- use the medium of screenwriting in imaginative and creative ways to communicate ideas

Examples of learning, teaching and assessment methods used:

Screenwriting employs a wide range of learning and teaching methods such as practical workshops, lecture/seminars, screenings, large and small group discussion and presentations and as such is inclusive for a variety of learning styles. The duration of the teaching sessions for a 15-credit module would normally be three hours and students will be required to work independently and/or in small groups both within and outside of timetabled sessions.

Practical skills relevant to employment:

On successful completion of the course, students will be able to:

- formulate and complete a script
- be able to pitch an idea to a panel of potential backers
- research an idea and develop a concept from it
- successfully communicate the idea to others

Examples of learning, teaching and assessment methods used:

Screenwriting makes use of the workshop format, whereby student's work is continually worked on throughout the academic year. There are also exercises in pitching to an industry, creating the initial concept and research assignments that encourage students to see themselves as engaging with industry standards.

Transferable/key skills:

On successful completion of the course, students will be able to:

- acquire a range of transferable skills, graduate attributes and personal qualities, which will enhance their confidence and independence both during and after their studies;
- develop an independent, organised approach to learning, and thereby practise time management skills through working to deadlines;

- develop the ability to work productively with others in groups so as to sustain exploratory discussions, plan work and explore diverse opinions with respect and critical acumen;
- work collectively on practical tasks and performances offering and accepting constructive criticism, meeting group deadlines, making decisions and fulfilling group objectives;
- develop the autonomy to construct and sustain a programme of study that allows for varying degrees of specialisation in the area of screenwriting;
- work in flexible, creative and independent ways, showing self-discipline, self-direction and reflexivity.

Examples of learning, teaching and assessment methods used:

There are a range of competences needed for successful completion of the work and it is these transferable skills that make graduates in this domain much sought after in other environments, thereby enhancing a students' profile and employability. These include the following: timekeeping, literacy, ability to work independently, communication and so on.

14. Assessment Strategy

As with other courses in the University, Screenwriting has a variety of assessment types which are both formative and summative. Formative assessments normally carry no weighting but are critical for the students' development and preparation for the related summative assessment. Formative assessment can take the form of learning team or peer review or presentations and rehearsed readings. In addition formative assessment can be a part of the individual tutorial system. Each assessment is aligned with its intended learning outcomes and learning activities so it is clear what is being assessed.

The overall assessment strategy is designed to facilitate student's independent learning and to introduce them to a wide variety of employment options. It builds towards the completion of either a major project or an independent study in level six, with smaller projects throughout levels 4 and 5 imbuing students with the basic skills to complete this. Along with the major project or study there are a series of summative and formative projects that are designed to facilitate the student's entry into the workplace (pitches, concept creation etc). These become more prominent towards the end of level 5 and in level 6 with the explicit assumption that they can be used to prepare students for employment in any field.

The assessment programme is such that it:

- has module learning outcomes which relate to the course outcomes;
- has assessment criteria that can be applied to all learning outcomes in Screenwriting;
- is both course-led and student-centred and can be negotiated where appropriate;
- is process and product based.

The assessed learning which students may achieve on the course can be classified under four different headings, or domains:

- the conceptual involves research, selection and analysis;
- the productive demands the interpretation and application of research;
- the contextual/critical evidences critical thinking and;
- the personal/interpersonal tracks the development of those skills pertinent to organisation and successful completion of a project.

The assessment strategy offers opportunities for formative, summative and synoptic learning. A Screenwriting module assessment often requires a combination of practical work, for example a 15 minute opening extract of screenplay (normally around 15 pages) could also be supplemented by written work such as a 1500 word essay, critical analysis, creative treatment or learning report. Not all modules involve the disaggregation of marks because of the integrated nature of applying research to practice. Such modules carry a single 100% weighting that comprises research, application, learning journal and written analysis. This synoptic approach allows students to make positive connections across the course and the nature of the work enables them to practise and receive feedback via formative assessment. All work in Screenwriting encourages critical thinking and analysis and is founded upon a range of theoretical perspectives, social contexts and practical methodologies.

15. Programme structures and requirements

Please see Appendix 1 for the Award Map.

The course is available in full and part-time modes. In the first year students enter onto the Joint Honours pathway but thereafter have the opportunity to remain as joint honours or reduce to a Minor Pathway.

The degree programme has three levels, within the definitions of the Framework for Higher Education Qualifications and each level should total 120 credits.

16. QAA and Professional Academic Standards and Quality

The course reflects the subject benchmark statements for Communication, Media, Film and Cultural Studies (2019) and Dance, Drama and Performance (2019), The work is underpinned by appropriate theoretical approaches to production e.g. analytical, critical, contextual and the preparation for vocational destinations and the Framework for Higher Education Qualifications which are central to course design, assessment and student opportunity.

The course embraces the common features characterising the discipline such as:

- an applied understanding of processes and professional practices involved in the production of a screenplay;
- a critical and practical awareness of form and aesthetics;
- an understanding of narrative processes and representation;
- creative, innovative and imaginative skills combining both the conceptual and the practical;
- research - practical and/or theoretical and the location of practice within an appropriate framework of informing ideas and skills;
- intellectual analysis and critical reflection;
- self-management, initiative and independent learning;
- the acquisition of knowledge, skills and understanding through processes of research, action, reflection and evaluation;
- collaborative learning and heuristic principles, on 'learning through doing' in group contexts which fosters a range and high level of communication skills;
- analysis of theory and of performance texts, which may be written or notated and/or the study of the design and creation of performance as an event or process;
- research - practical and/or theoretical and the location of practice within an appropriate framework of informing ideas, history and skills.

Screenwriting is offered as a joint honours pathway and can be studied alongside other subject areas such as Film Studies, Film Production, English Language, Journalism, or Drama & Performance.

The work is rigorously underpinned by appropriate theoretical approaches e.g. analytic, historical, critical, contextual and the preparation for vocational destinations and is located at Level 6 of the Framework for Higher Education Qualifications. The combination of subject areas creates the flavour for the course and reflects the subject benchmark statements by incorporating the opportunity to engage with video production, performance and the integration of a variety of modes of performance and creation, including other media and new technology.

17. Support for students

Students are encouraged to identify and, with guidance, to reflect on their own learning needs and are offered support as appropriate to those needs at both University and subject level.

The Screenwriting Course Team is committed to ensuring that all students are given consideration and support throughout their time at the University of Worcester. Student's transition into University life is assisted by an initial one week's induction programme which through a range of activities introduces students to their course, the staff who will be teaching them and the School. Students are for example invited to attend the School of Arts Freshers' Party in induction week.

During this initial induction week, students are involved in a range of activities which support them in developing an understanding of the expectations of their course, undergraduate study and the University's systems and services. They have talks or tours, for example, which introduce them to the Library and IT facilities, Media Services, the Careers and the Counselling Service. Students are also provided with a brief induction into their second and third year study.

All students are allocated an academic tutor who will advise them on issues related to their course throughout their study at the University and who monitors their progress. Academic tutor sessions usually take one of two forms: either one-to-one sessions where notes are taken and stored on SOLE, or group based sessions where general points and issues relating to the course are dealt with. Students are invited to meet their academic tutor twice a semester. Tutorials are held on a one-to-one basis during all years of study.

Staff teaching students on modules support students through one – to- one and small group tutorials; and provide students with clear indications of when they will be available to see students either on their office door, via email or in module outlines.

Students are further supported through a range of online support, for example via email or skype tutorials. All modules are supported through the virtual learning environment accessed through Blackboard. The Course Handbook is also available online.

Furthermore, the Course Team liaises with a range of centrally provided support services to ensure that students access all appropriate channels of support, these include for example:

- The Disability and Dyslexia Service within Student Services which provides specialist support on a one to one basis.
- Writing support from the Royal Literary Fund Writers in Residence.
- Writing support for international and EU students from the Language Centre.
- The Students' Union which as an independent charity, devoted to the educational interests and welfare of all students studying at the University it represents student views within the University.

Classification determined on the profile of the best grades from 120 credits attained at Level 6 only.

For further information on honours degree classification, see the University's Taught Courses Regulatory Framework.

20. Graduate destinations, employability and links with employers

Graduate destinations

The subject area continues to create valuable links with employers and students have a wide range of opportunities to further their careers. There are connections with Raindance Films in London, the Producers Forum in Birmingham, key Universities in America offering screenwriting, the Writers Guild of Great Britain and the Directors Guild of Great Britain.

Student employability

There is an emphasis within the course on developing a strong work ethic together with transferable and subject skills, which are critical for career development. These skills afford a wider access to a range of career opportunities and students are now working in a range of related professions from AV and Video companies to the BBC and Independent Television, local exhibition and theatre.

Links with employers

Screenwriting has set up an online forum where links from potential employers can be posted and accessed by students. This has proved to be a valuable resource for students wishing to collaborate on projects offered by local businesses. The Screenwriting course team also provides some links to employers through offering workshops and seminars attended by BBC producers and encouraging students to make use of the various online facilities such as the BB writer's room. Furthermore, students benefit from the range of professionals who give an input at the annual UW Careers week, thus broadening their understanding of potential career paths.

Please note: This specification provides a concise summary of the main features of the programme and the learning outcomes that a typical student might reasonably be expected to achieve and demonstrate if s/he takes full advantage of the learning opportunities that are provided. More detailed information on the learning outcomes, content and teaching, learning and assessment methods of each module can be found in associated course documentation e.g. course handbooks, module outlines and module specifications.
